Notes

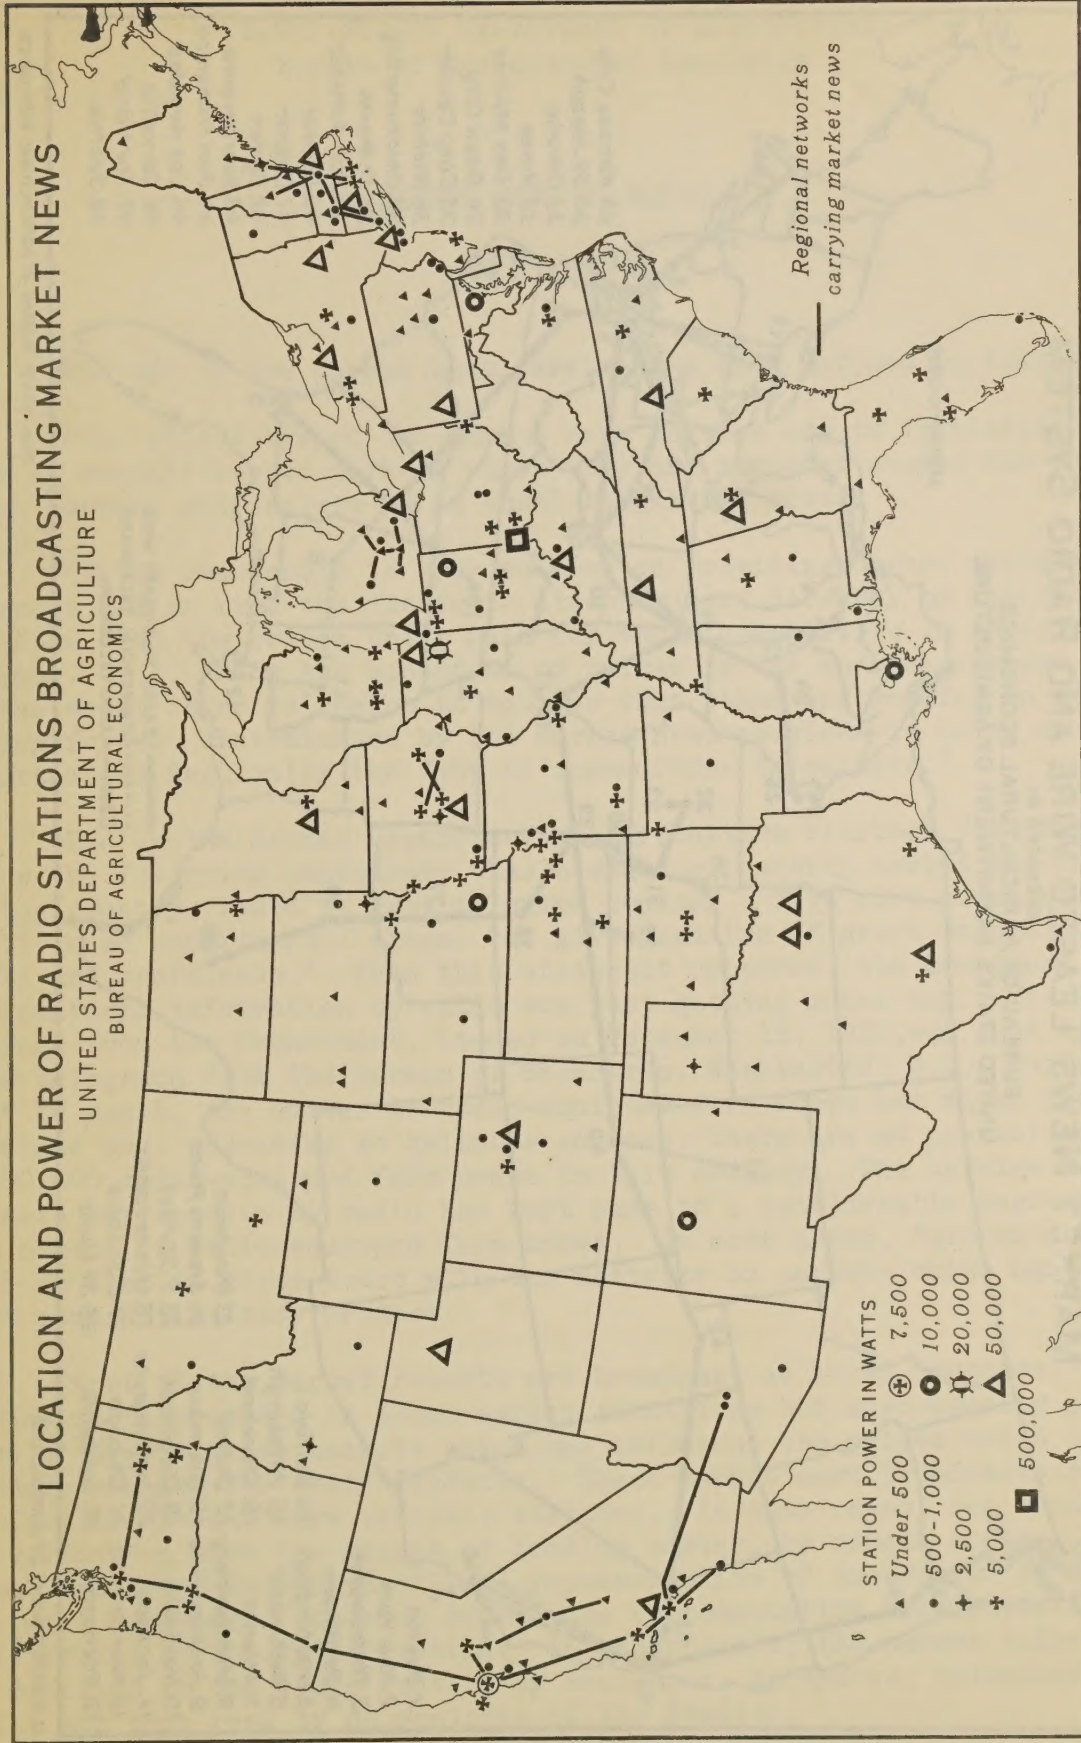

1. Daily, as used in this directory, means Monday through Saturday.
2. The schedules on the pages that follow are correct as of January 1 insofar as it has been possible to obtain the information from market news offices and from individual radio stations. Circular Letters were sent to 715 radio stations in the United States. Replies were received from 589 stations.
3. As the seasons for the different commodities change there will be minor changes in the program material furnished to the broadcasting stations.
4. The time given in the various schedules is the local time for the zone in which the station is located. Listeners who live in time zones east or west of that in which the station is located will have to allow for the differences in time.

MARKET NEWS BY RADIO

The aim of the market news service has been defined as follows:

"The objectives of the market news service are to facilitate the flow of commodities to markets where they are the most needed and to place farmers and dealers on an equal bargaining basis.

"It is reasonable to suppose that in providing market reports Congress had in mind the desire to aid producers directly by familiarizing them with the prices being paid for their commodities in various markets. . . . While the quotation of prices is the most emphasized phase of the work, there is reason to believe that other information on price-making forces, disseminated by the market news service, is quite as important in regulating the flow of commodities to markets."

The United States Department of Agriculture Yearbook for 1922 contains the following statement: "As a means of getting market information to the country, radio is growing quite popular. This sort of service is still in an experimental stage, but gives promise of great future developments and usefulness." When this statement appeared, the broadcast of agricultural information by radio was just getting under way. The first message from the Department, issued on December 15, 1920, was sent by wireless telegraph from the Bureau of Standards, Washington, D.C. During the past 17 years, the number of radio-equipped farm homes has shown a steady increase and, according to reliable sources, there are at present more than 3,500,000 radio-equipped farm homes in this country. The service which farmers may receive by radio has kept pace to a considerable degree with the number of radio-equipped farm homes. In most areas, farmers are now able to keep in close touch with the activity on markets which handle the farm commodities they produce.

Most of the market reports are broadcast as local programs. They emphasize information on local market conditions but also usually present news of more distant markets which may influence the prices which local farmers receive for their products. These market news broadcasts are handled in several ways by radio stations. In some cases, the broadcasts are presented from the market or trading center, by remote control, by a local (market news branch office) representative of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. In some cases, the representative broadcasts from the main studio of the radio station. In other cases, the market information is supplied to the radio station by messenger, telephone, telegraph, or mail, and then read by an employee of the Station.

Many agricultural market news broadcasts are presented regularly in connection with agricultural programs of a general nature. Some of these broadcasts include "Farm Flashes", which originate in the Radio Service of the United States Department of Agriculture and are cleared through offices of the State Extension Services or sent direct to cooperating stations. In most cases the market news information is presented in connection with State Department of Agriculture of Extension Service programs. Agricultural leaders in areas served by the stations are frequent participants in these latter broadcasts.

Within the past 2 years, increased service to radio stations by press associations with nation-wide coverage has aided materially in getting market news to stations quickly and accurately.

In the Department of Agriculture period of the National Farm and Home Hour, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics presents "Today's Farm Prices", a daily "swing of the markets" which is intended to serve as a guide to market trends. This report includes information on cotton, butter, eggs, potatoes, and on one or two other commodities at New York; on butter, eggs, wheat, corn, livestock, potatoes, onions, and apples in season at Chicago; wheat and oats at Minneapolis; wheat and corn at Kansas City, and wheat at Liverpool.

Two sectional programs are worthy of special mention. The Western Farm and Home Hour is presented from San Francisco under the direction of the Radio Service, United States Department of Agriculture, and presents a daily digest of market news covering important commodities on the San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle markets with occasional information on some commodities at New York and Chicago. This broadcast is carried by thirteen stations affiliated with the National Broadcasting Company, located in four Western States. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics, in cooperation with the New England state departments of agriculture and other agricultural organizations, maintains the New England Radio News Service at Boston. This service is now completing its tenth year of successful operation as one of the outstanding examples of cooperation in broadcasting market news. A detailed market news broadcast is presented each morning over two stations and a mid-day program over the Colonial network, which is carried by seven stations and serves the entire New England area. The Western Farm and Home Hour and the New England program feature agricultural leaders as guest speakers.

It is not intended that this directory should contain complete information of all agricultural broadcasts. It is intended to provide information which will enable farmers, and others interested to find where and when they can get agricultural market news by radio. All of the stations listed in this directory are broadcasting market news which has been supplied in part or entirely by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, either from Washington or from one or more of the Bureau's branch offices. In this directory the length of the broadcast periods are given in order to provide an indication of the amount of material presented.

Farmers want market reports at regular and dependable periods.

- - - - -

Farmers want reliable market reports while they are still of "cash" value.

- - - - -

Mid-day continues to be the most popular hour, but early morning broadcasts are increasing in number and popularity.
